The following paragraphs are part of a letter in the form of a journal written to the absent bishop of Martinique by Vicar General Parel, the whole forming an historic document of great intelligence and particularity. A copy of the original was given by the writer to Chercia Mes given by the writer to Chercia Mes given by the writer to Chaplain MacGrail, of the Dixie, and appears entire in Century. The qualities of a trained observer appear in these pathetic par-

"Thursday, May 8. The Ascension. This date should be written in blood! "Toward four o'clock in the morning a violent thunderstorm, with torrents of rain, broke over Fort de-France. Toward eight o'clock the horizon in the north, in the direction of the volcano, was as black as ink. The clouds were moving rapidly to-ward the northwest. The sky was darkening more and more, when suddenly I heard something like hall falling on the roofs and the leaves of the trees. A great noise rose eight o'clock mass was in progress, a terrible panic seized the congregation, and the priest was left standing alone.

"Night had descended on us, and the crash of thunder was continuous. The sea retreated three times for a dis-tance of several hundred meters. The boat which was putting out of St. Pierre turned back.

"I stepped out on my balcony to take in the situation, and immediately it was covered with a hail of stones and still hot einders. People stond petri-fied on their doorsteps. Others ran wildly here and there through the streets. All this lasted for about a quarter of an hour-a quarter on an hour of terror.

Pierre? No one dured to think. Telephonic communication had been cut off abruptly in the middle of a word. persons asserted that they had seen, above the tops of the mountains separating us from St. Pierre, a column of fire rising into the sky and spreading outward toward all points of the horizon. Boundless anxiety seized upon us all. At 11 o'clock the Marin set out to reconneiter. It witnessed a sight appalling beyond imaginstion. St. Pierre was nothing but one vast brazier! When the truth, like the funeral knell of Martinique, reached us at about one o'clock, a cry of horror went up not to be described. I will not try to give a picture of such scenes. To write of them would take the pen of Dante and the accents of Jeremiah.

"I learn that a boat is to be sent out to rescue the wounded. I am fortunate enough to obtain a place in it, together with one of my vicars. The police and gendarmes cannot keep back the crowd struggling to make its way on board. The expedition is composed of the public prosecutor of the repub-lic, and officer, and a platoon of maice and gendarmes cannot keep back rines. Banknotes Employed as Writing Paper by Extravagant or Fortish Persons-The Message of a Dying Soldier.

The use of ping-pong halls as past cards is the latest fresh of seekers

It started in Liverpool pulls recenttages, is spreading in England. The principal result is much unhappiness to the postman and a recent neareg ulation in some places forbidding al such unhandy missives.

The balls were stamped, an address written under the stamp, and the menface. These clames and bulky post cards were posted in Liverpoorts, the thousands and gave the post of ce and therities an immense amount of extra work, says Hearst's Chicago American.

Among those idle people who from time to time have wasted their superfluous energies in testing the forbear-ance of the postal officials in man in Southampton, England, whose forur-ite form of missive used to be a postage stamp. But as he wrote the address on the face of the stamps, the authorities decided that they were not bound to deliver them. It was probably the same person who afterward pasted a complete pack of playing eards, each neatly addressed on the lack, but with no message whatever on the colored

Another very peculiar letter found in a London pillar-box has automo was a green apple on one side of which was cut an address, and on the other the simple, but expressive message: Sour-like you."

Bank notes have been employed as a writing paper more than once by extravagant or foolish persons. Among the effects of an English miles who died about 15 years ugo was found a C5 note on which the deceased had wellten directions as in the disposal of his property. At Hampitead there lived until recently a wealthy bachelor of whom it was said that he once write a proposal of marriage to a lady on the back of a $50 note, and because it was sent back without a word of comment by the recipient, refused ever afterward to have anything to do with the fair sex.

Whiting paper, or, indeed, paper of any kind, is usually at a premium among soldiers on active vervice. Many eurious libititutes came from the British soldiers in South Africa. One of the commonest has been mealle leaves. "Mealie" is the South African name for maize.
